The Literature of Mountain Climbing in America

BY ALLEN H. BENT

THE books and magazine articles upon American mountains, like the trails thereof, have become so numerous that there is perhaps some excuse for a guide to thread their mazes. Mine makes no pretention to completeness; it aims simply to give a helping hand to those who have started on the upward path. In order to keep it within reasonable bounds only books and papers that are devoted wholly and in part to actual climbing are included. Many articles have strayed into unexpected places. For example, one would hardly look for information about the White Mountains in a San Francisco magazine, or for climbs in the Sierra Nevada in a Honolulu monthly, or for the Adirondacks in a Swiss mountaineering journal, yet all these things have been found and doubtless there are many more such that have eluded the compiler's eye.

The beginnings of mountaineering in America have to be looked for mainly in early histories and narratives of travel, though the first ascent in the Canadian Rockies is chronicled in the supplement to a botanical magazine. The first magazine article upon American mountains seems to be Jeremy Belknap's account of the White Mountains, printed in the American Magazine in Philadelphia in February, 1788. The first book was Joel T. Headley's The Adirondack, published in 1849. The Alpine Journal of England, the earliest of such magazines, had a short account of a climb in Central America in its first volume, 1864, and in the third volume, 1867, there was an account of an ascent of Mt. Hood. The first book devoted to alpine climbing in America was Clarence King's Mountaineering in the Sierra Nevada.

APPALACHIA has published in recent years articles upon Early Mountaineers (May, 1913); The Indians and the Mountains (June, 1915); and The Mountaineering Clubs of America (December, 1916). These collectively form a sort of introduction to the mountains of America; but, as all were written by the compiler of this list, perhaps his recommendation is not valid. More interesting are John C. Van Dyke's book The Mountain (1916), and the articles on "Famous American Mountains," by Henry Gannett, in Everybody's Magazine, May, 1902; "Mountaineering in North America," by Robert Dunn, in Outing, September, 1907; "The World's Highest Altitudes and First Ascents," by Charles E. Fay, in the National Geographic Magazine, June, 1909; and "The Climbed and Unclimbed Peaks of the Americas," by Granville Fortescue, in the Bulletin of the International Bureau of the American Republics, June, 1910. Valuable as adjuncts are the Dictionary of Altitudes prepared by the U. S. Geological Survey in 1906; the booklet upon Equipment, published by the Appalachian Mountain Club in 1916; and the maps of the U. S. Geological Survey and Forest Service of the United States, and the Topographical Survey and the Dominion Parks of the Department of Interior of Canada.

Of first importance perhaps are the journals of our mountaineering clubs, which accordingly we place first in our list. Then follows the bibliography of peaks, ranges or regions arranged in alphabetical order, the individual titles being so far as feasible in chronological sequence.
